Cookie Policy

With the new Cookie Law “Cookiewet” (Telecommunicatiewet artikel 11.7a) effective as of June 5th 2012, every website is legally obligated to inform their users of the nature of its cookies and to request consent on their use. With the cookie bar presented to you at your first visit to our website, we aim to inform you on the cookies purpose and how to delete them. In due time, this legislation will be replaced by the e-privacyverordening, yet is still to be approved by the European Commission. We have taken care to be prepared in advance.

What is a cookie?

We use cookies on this website, meaning that we send a small text file to your device when you request to view our web page(s) which your device saves on its hard drive. Although the word ‘cookies’ has gotten an ill reputation, these files are mostly used to support the proper function of a website and optimize your user experience. Cookies are not viruses nor can they install malicious software on your device or retrieve privacy-sensitive information. Nearly all websites use cookies as they are an important part of your browser experience.

Cookie use

Lemonade Consulting does not store personal information in cookies nor allows third parties to do so. Our cookies cannot be used to trace information about the website’s visitors. It is important to us that you understand what cookies our website uses and to what purpose. We aim to protect your privacy and our website’s convenience of use. Below you can find information on what cookies we use and to what purpose.

Functional cookies

We use cookies to ease processing of your personal information, such as remembering your e-mail address and user preferences. You can disable these cookies and preemptively reject such cookies through your browser settings. However, these cookies are allowed by law since they do not store any privacy sensitive information.

Cookies for social media icons

Like most other websites we make use of social media icons. These are buttons that allow you to visit related pages on social media platforms. You can disable or reject such cookies in your browser settings.

Analytical Cookies

Additional to functional and social media cookies, Google Analytics places a cookie on your device to monitor website statistics. This allows us to track website traffic, popularity of items and anonymous device characteristics. With this information, we can improve our website and improve your user experience. All information collected through this cookie is anonymised as much as possible. Your IP address is explicitly excluded from this information. The collected information is transferred to Google and stored on its US servers. Due to the anonymity of your information and IP address, these cookies are also allowed under Dutch law. You may disable or reject such cookies in your browser settings.
